At various times, we have been involved in the supply of temperature control systems for chocolate production plants.

The historical conching and refining lines have been renewed with constant and continuous investment to improve their productivity and efficiency.

Our temperature control units for this classic application consist of a heating section served by steam from the plant boilers and a cooling section with water from a chiller or evaporative tower, depending on the type of production.

All have a customer-side interface so they can be controlled remotely via PLC.
